

30 Day English Speaking Challenge: Family

Week 2: Activities – Day 14: Money

Question: Some activities cost a lot of money. If money were no object, what activity would you like to try?

Vocabulary:

1. If money were no object: hypothetical situation in which cost is not an obstacle in preventing you from doing something or buying something

If money were no object, I'd quit my job and travel around the world.

2. Throw caution to the wind (often used with "decide"): abandon your usual tendencies and try something risky or adventurous

He decided to throw caution to the wind and invest all his savings into a new business venture.

Vanessa's answer:

If money were no object, I'd love to take horseback riding lessons twice a week with my family. And if we realized that we really liked it, maybe we'd take a vacation with a guide and go on horseback riding trails in the mountains. And who knows, maybe we'd decide to throw caution to the wind and get our own horses.
